

I am a voluntary participant in the Indiana no call list.
I pay for my phone service and do not want it cluttered with unwanted solicitations. The phone is a very powerful communication tool. I understand why businesses want to be allowed to call me and ask me to buy their products, but since I pay for my phone service would it not be right to use it the way I want. Not as an advertising vehicle, but as a way to communicate with friends and family or in an emergency.
I don't know the law pertaining to the use of phones for solicitation so if the no call list becomes a thing of the past some kind of method of blocking companies from spamming my phone would be needed. Maybe a required identifier in their caller id that would allow me to disregard such calls is needed.
